

The Red Thread in Noah's Ark (Part 3) – The Choice

The Red Thread in Noah's Ark.

I once met a man named Popeye.

He wasn't a cartoon character, he was a real man serving time in a minimum security prison. I'd gone with my church to minister to whoever would come to meet with us.

Popeye told me he wanted to trust Christ to save him from his sins, but he needed to clean up his life first.

I couldn't convince him that cleaning up his life was not a prerequisite for salvation. The only prerequisite was faith in the message that there's salvation in Christ alone. "No," he said. "I must get my life straightened out first. Then . . . then I'll become a Christian." He refused to accept salvation as a free gift.

Every year that goes by I think about Popeye and wonder what happened to him. Only God knows what was really going on in his heart that night.

Maybe he couldn't fathom such a radical gift of undeserved grace as he sat in prison serving time for his crime.

Maybe he was just saying what he thought I wanted to hear and didn't really care about Jesus or changing.

I learned during our time of prison ministry that a surprising number of people prefer prison over living in the world, because, despite the fact that it's prison, it's their home.

We're not always much different.

Sometimes we find ourselves imprisoned in sin, and despite it making us miserable, because it's familiar – because it's home – we stay.

Staying is a choice we make.

When Noah built the ark while the world watched, I believe he preached the message of salvation from judgment. (2 Peter 2:5 calls Noah a "preacher of righteousness.") This leads me to believe others could have followed Noah and his family onto the ark, leaving the condemned world behind, but they refused. Why would God give Noah the message of righteousness but not offer the path? He wouldn't. He didn't.

Noah knew the path, and he preached the message. They chose to ignore it.

Choosing to accept God's invitation and enter the Ark seems a no-brainer to us.

Enter the ark and be safe, or refuse and get washed away in the worldwide flood of judgment with everyone else.

How hard of a choice could that really have been, and yet only eight made the choice to accept God's invitation.

Popeye never said he was refusing God's invitation of salvation, but neither was he willing to accept it. Unfortunately, Popeye's choosing to do nothing about the invitation was choosing to reject it.

In the days of Noah, the world faced the same decision.

Ignoring Noah's message of righteousness and impending judgment and not entering the ark was choosing to see how long they could tread water, not in a serene pool for an hour or two, but rather in a raging storm guaranteed to overwhelm them and the earth. (You can't cover the entire earth with water in only forty days with a gentle Spring shower. It takes a deluge.)

In my last post, The Red Thread in Noah's Ark, Part 2 I noted that Noah's family was saved based on Noah's righteousness, not their own. But they still had to make the choice to enter the ark.

We, too, have a choice to make.

We must either choose to accept God's invitation to enter into our salvation provided through His Son, or choose to reject it.

Choosing to do nothing about it is choosing to reject it – to reject Christ.

Noah and his family accepted God's invitation, entered the ark and were saved from the flood. All who refused to enter, perished.

Likewise, all who accept Christ's invitation to enter into salvation through Christ will be saved from sin. All who refuse, will perish.

I think Noah and his family chose well. What about you?

By the way, here's an interesting and ironic thought:

In today's world, a person entering prison steps into a "box" of sorts, cut off from the world.

In the time of Noah, however, it was the world that was the prison and stepping into the Ark – the "box" – was stepping into freedom.

I just thought that was interesting. It's a freebie for you.

Christians Should Have Their Own Curse Words

The first time I saw this sketch by comedian Brad Stine, in the midst of my laughter, I had to agree. Christians should have their own curse words.

Why don't Christians have their own curse words? Do we not get hurt, too?

This morning I was in the throws of fighting the War of the Weeds and the Roses.

Roses are the stinging sea anemone of the garden. Weeds know that if they hide in a rose bush they have a better chance that the gardner may leave them alone. (Seriously, weeds think through this stuff.)

I had a world-class army of weeds hidden in my roses, but I didn't leave them alone. This was a war I was determined to win.

As I reached my hands through the maze of rose thorns, some so big you could hang a hat on them and others so numerous they make a shark look toothless, I thought how handy it would be if I had acceptable curse words, because "FIDDLE STICKS!" just wasn't getting the job done.

One of my best friends invented the curse word: crudamatic. That's still one of my favorites, but it's still no match for a clash with a rose bush.

What about you? Do you have any favorite Christian curse words? Leave me a comment below. I'd love to hear from you.

Today's Bible Study Tip #1 – Read the Bible Like a Novel

~ Isaiah 40:8 ~

As you know, if you follow my blog regularly, Bible Study is kind of my thing.

In fact, it's the whole point of my blog. I want everyone to Join the Journey with me into God's Word.

In today's journey, I'm sharing a Bible Study Tip – one simple way to get more out of the Bible.

It's a tip I stumbled upon years ago when I decided to read the Bible in a year.

All through the month of December, the local radio station WMHK had been announcing their free Bible Reading Guide for reading through the Bible in a year. I'd done it before, but it had been a struggle for me to stay on track. The reading guide made it easy – I just wasn't faithful to the reading guide.

As I thought back on my previous experience, I wasn't sure I wanted to rejoin the I-Read-the-Whole-Bible-in-a-Year-Club. That's when I stumbled upon this great tip.

Since The Message paraphrase of the Bible is written in somewhat of a novel form, I thought that might help make it easier to accomplish my goal. I picked up a copy and started reading on January 1.

Before I realized it, I discovered I was reading the Bible like a novel.

I finished it in September.

And that's my Bible Study Tip for today – one simple way to get more out of the Bible:

Read the Bible like a novel.

I was shocked by how fast I read through the Bible when I read it like a novel, but more importantly was that I now had a better feel for the entire text. It stopped being a collection of individual books and chapters, and became one exciting adventure.

Other than that one difficult year, I'd only ever read through the Bible over an extended time. In fact, the first time it took me three years to finish it.

Reading through the Bible thoughtfully and slowly is life-changing, but so is reading the Bible quickly, like a novel.

Getting large chunks of the Bible at one time helps give a fuller, more cohesive picture of the whole Bible than did my reading a chapter or two each day. It makes sense. Imagine how hard it would be to keep up with the themes and plot of a novel if it took you a year or two (or three) to read it.

I will always advocate careful study of the Bible using a good translation like the New American Standard, New International Version, or English Standard Version, but I also advocate rapid reading.

This novel approach won't give you all you need. It can't take you deep enough, but reading the Bible like a novel will bring it to life in a way you can't experience reading it slowly. Plus, if you've ever felt that reading the entire Bible is too much, you'll discover it's not.

You don't have to read The Message translation. This works with any translation. And you don't have to wait until the New Year. Get started today.

What could be better for your Summer Reading than the #1 best seller in history?

Check out my post which includes printable book marks to help you keep your place. Mark off each book as you finish it.

Great Bible Study Tip: Read the Bible Like a Novel

By the way, unlike these three novels in the picture above (which I highly recommend), the Bible is not fiction nor is it based on a true story. It's the truest story ever told.

Have you ever read the Bible like a novel? Share your experience in the comments, and if you enjoyed this post, I hope you'll share it with others.

Monday Music – “Soldier’s Light” by Rylee Preston & “Fighting Fear” by Edie Melson

Happy Memorial Day!

Today we honor all the men and women who have dedicated their lives to keeping our country free. We also honor all the families left at home who've supported their loved ones as they've laid down their lives.

We can never repay you – all of you.

In today's Monday Music, fifteen-year old Rylee Preston sings an original song, "Soldier's Light" inspired by a poignant moment in her life. The moment when her father's good friend received "the news."

Army SPC. Justin Rollins was killed in Iraq in 2007.

After witnessing her father grieve over the loss of his friend's son, Rylee wrote this song. It's a beautiful, haunting song of the price of freedom.

Rylee stars in this music video which portrays the moment too many families have had to endure – the loss of their husband father, son, or brother – another of our US soldiers.

Rylee wrote "Soldier's Light" to honor Army SPC. Justin Rollins. The proceeds from the sale of her song (available on iTunes) will go to the Rollins Ride charity event, which raises money to support local schools and honors this brave soldier and all others who have given the ultimate cost for our freedom.

Fighting Fear: Winning the War at Home When Your Soldier Goes to Battle by Edie Melson

If you or a loved one is one of the countless families of a soldier deployed abroad, I encourage you to check out this book by acclaimed author/editor Edie Melson:

Fighting Fear: Winning the War at Home When Your Soldier Leaves for Battle.

“Saying goodbye to a loved one leaving for war is a gut-wrenching proposition. But for those of us left behind, their deployment marks the beginning of our battle. And yet, it is possible to find God’s peace in the midst of fear and conquer the terror that lurks in the darkness of doubt. In Fighting Fear: Winning the War at Home, parents, spouses and siblings recount their personal journey as God goes before His people during times of spiritual, physical and military warfare. Learn the secret to living a peace-filled life when a loved one leaves for battle. Fight fear; win the war at home.” ~ Amazon.com

Read what award winning novelist Ann Tatlock has to say about it:

Few life events can be more unsettling than sending a loved one off to war. This book captures so vividly the fear, doubts and anxiety that go along with deployment, but more than that, each devotion leaves no doubt as to God’s presence with us in the midst of it all.

– Ann Tatlock.

Everyone in America has been touched by a soldier. If you’re breathing air in the land of the free, you’ve been touched by a soldier.

What does Memorial Day mean to you?

Share a message to our soldiers below in the comments, and help spread our gratitude around the world to our soldiers here and abroad, and to all of their loved ones waiting their return, by sharing this post with your friends and family

Monday Music – The Heart: Needtobreathe, David Letterman, & David Jeremiah

<https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=EY0mgqK154U>

Needtobreathe is one of my top two favorite groups, and they're fellow South Carolinians – whoo hoo!

(If anyone knows them and wants to introduce me, I'd be fine with that!)

If you missed Needtobreathe's performance on The David Letterman Show, I found it for us on youtube.

This song will make your having faced another Monday worth it. Feel free to play it every morning. My free gift to you.

As David Letterman said, "It doesn't get any better than that!"

The thought I want to leave you with as you listen (and dance) to this song is:

What has your heart?

What gets you dancing?

What are you passionate about that you simply must have?

If God has called you to it, it's a done deal – it's His deal.

If He hasn't, you don't want it. Let it go.

As you're busy doing the thing that you simply must do, don't lose sight of the fact that it's God's responsibility to accomplish all He's called you to do.

Don't turn your passion into a burden or let fear overtake you.

Keep it your passion.

Don't lose The Heart.

Dr. David Jeremiah gave an outstanding teaching on defeating the fear of failure. This teaching will excite you as you discover how to keep the heart in all that God calls you to do.

I've included it at the bottom of this post.

The teaching actually starts at the 16 minute mark if you want to fast forward straight to Dr. David Jeremiah.

If you enjoyed this, I hope you'll use the share buttons to email this to a friend or post this to Pinterest, Facebook, or Twitter. (Of course, for Twitter, you can also use the handy pre-made tweets below.)

The Red Thread in Noah's Ark (Part Two) – The Family

The Red Thread in Noah's Ark – Pt. 2

@JeanWilund.com

In all the world, only Noah was holy in God's eyes. In all the world!

Despite living in a world where every heart was set on evil, Noah still lived his life in such a way that God could declare him righteous in His eyes.

I talked about this in my last post, The Red Thread in Noah's Ark – Part One.

Noah was earnest about pleasing God, and he trusted in Him and His Promises.

Today's post isn't about Noah – it's about everyone else.

It's staggering to me that sin had so quickly brought the world to the place where only one man in all the earth was righteous in God's eyes.^[1]

Imagine what everyone else was like. I think I got a small taste of it recently at my daughter's soccer game.

I usually stand on the sidelines to take photos, so I get to hear just about everything. This particular evening, a constant barrage of hateful comments spewed out of the mouths of some parents. My heart went out to Noah for having to live every day in the midst of much worse evil.

After enduring two hours of a steady stream of malevolent words, while at the same time restraining myself from outwardly expressing my opinion on their abhorrent behavior, I was exhausted. My brain hurt!

How did Noah do it? I couldn't. I definitely wasn't holy in my thoughts that night.

If Noah was the only one holy in God's eyes, what does that say about his own family?

It might mean they could have been Reality TV stars today. (Can you see it? "Stay tuned for today's episode of The Housewives of Noah and watch Ham's wife flip a table.")

Or maybe they were more normal, like us – or at least some of us. But, regardless, we know they didn't find favor with God.

Not even Noah's family was holy, and yet God invited them into the ark.

(If Noah's family was anything like those soccer parents, there's no way I'd have wanted to invite them into the ark.)

They probably weren't, but maybe, possibly, they were. Either way, we know they weren't holy.)

Why did Noah's family get invited into the ark but not the rest of the world?

It's a Red Thread Clue:

Noah's wife, his sons, and their wives weren't righteous in God's eyes, but they belonged to his family. [1]

Likewise, none of us is righteous, but all who accept Christ as their Savior are adopted into His family. [2] His righteousness becomes ours. [3]

That's it.

I see no other reason.

The basis of their being invited by God into the ark (their only possible means of salvation from the flood) was not their holiness. They were saved on the sole basis that they were in Noah's family, even while they were yet sinners.

Likewise, God sent His Son into the world so that all who believe that He paid the price for our sin on the cross will not perish. [4] God has invited us to accept His Son as our only possible means of salvation, and in so doing, receive adoption into His family [2], even while we are yet sinners. [5]

We've become God's children and co-heirs with Christ!

Romans 8:17 – Now if we are children, then we are heirs—heirs of God and co-heirs with Christ, if indeed we share in his sufferings in order that we may also share in his glory. (NIV)

That's great news for us because if we had to be worthy of salvation, we'd be sunk!

In my next post, we'll look at another important Red Thread Clue involving Noah's family – and us.
